the destroyer, steering for Hel [redacted] One [redacted] was unarmed, carried something like the word torpedo on her bows and seemed to be a torpedo retriever. At about 10 a.m. on 26 July 1953, destroyer BLYSKAWICA was about 7 sea miles north from Heisterneest, performing rapid and well executed turning maneuvers."

4. On the afternoon of 7 August 1953, a Polish sail school ship was about 15 sea miles east of Kristiansund. [redacted] she was the former German sail schoolship ELIZABETH. She was steering southeast, making about three or four knots. A gray steamer of about 3,000 to 4,000 tons dwt which, [redacted] was a former German sporttrecher was seen at some distance from, and steering parallel with, the sail ship. The steamer had very low masts with cross trees, rather high bridge structures and high deck superstructure aft of the smokestack which was even higher than the bridge structure and seemed to be almost level with the low mast trucks. At about 8 p.m. on 8 August 1953, the sail school ship again followed by the single-stacker was sighted off Rixhoeft, making for the Bay of Danzig. She had all sails set and made about three knots.
